Scholarship in a Digital World Colloquium

3:00-4:30 p.m. | 201 Bowen-Thompson Student Union

In this age of virtuality, we are moving away from physical books and journals and toward scholarship online. There are new paradigms to consider in an online, attention-driven economy, including (among other issues) predatory publishing, emerging vs. established online journals, changes in how we do research, access to professional journals and new forms of art and digital scholarship. These are just some of the ways to address scholarship in an increasingly digital world, and we welcome you to this, the third of our four College of Arts and Sciences town halls to share your ideas and concerns.

We will begin with a short statement from each panelist and then move to an open forum discussion.
