CELEBRATES LEGACY OF BGSU WOMEN'S ATHLETICS

There is a broadly held misconception that women's competitive sport emerged in U.S. colleges and universities only after the passage of Title IX in 1972. In reality, countless college women competed in a broad array of sports — including everything from basketball and tennis to archery, fencing and much more — well before the Education Amendments of 1972.

The new book Forward Falcons: Women's Sports at Bowling Green State University, 1914-1982 is a testament to the athletes, coaches and administrators who made women's athletics an exciting reality at BGSU during these formative years, laying a strong foundation for today's Falcon teams. The 370-page book is filled with photos and text that celebrate this legacy. The team of Janet Parks and Ann Bowers left "no stone unturned" during five years of meticulous research and writing, building upon Adelia Hostetler's exhaustive master's thesis.

The resulting insights into nearly a century of women's athletics at BGSU are unprecedented, making this a "must-read" for Falcon sports fans and those interested in the history of U.S. intercollegiate athletics. Forward Falcons is now available at www.lulu.com for $25, with all royalties going to the Center for Archival Collections at BGSU.
